Originally published in Britain as Ferdie and the Falling Leaves (and subsequently published by Scholastic, for the American school-market, as The Fox and the Falling Leaves), this delightful autumn picture-book follows the story of a young fox, and his somewhat less-than-graceful adjustment to the changing of the seasons. This is a beautiful book. Fletcher is a young fox that has noticed the forest is changing as the summer comes to an end. He has a favorite tree. When he sees the way the leaves are changing he thinks that the tree is sick. He does everything he can think of to help the tree keep its leaves. Of course in the end he can't save the leaves and he goes home very sad with the last leaf that was on the tree.

Julia was born and grew up in London, at the edge of Richmond Park, where she spent many happy hours watching birds, butterflies and bunnies. Her mum, aunt and granny all wrote ridiculous poems to commemorate family events, so she can't remember a time when she didn't have a tendency to think in rhyme.
