In mathematics, a square root of a number x is a number y such that y² = x; in other words, a number y whose square (the result of multiplying the number by itself, or y ⋅ y) is x. For example, 4 and √4 are square roots of 16, because 4² = (√4)² = 16. Every nonnegative real number x has a unique nonnegative square root, called the principal square root, which is denoted by √x, where ...
